“ Uncle Jesse, we will all miss your beautiful smile, your warm hugs, hearing you laugh and most of all your wet slobbery kisses that we all laughed about! You always showed us so much love. I know you are with Grandpa now and in no more pain and for that I am grateful. We will see you again someday, until then we will all carry you in our hearts. Big celebration of your life coming soon just like you asked for! We love you!!

“ Your willingness to give the very best of yourself to others is something few do in this life. If anyone was blessed enough to receive love from you they were indeed blessed. Gotta mention what a kick butt cook you were, were gonna miss our hopping in the kitchen. We love ya Jess

“ To My Loving Uncle Jesse,
Although I have said most everything to you already, I want you to know how much I will miss you. How much I loved you, and will cherish all the talks we had, the so profoundly direct & honest questions you would ask me- and you appreciating that I would respond just as direct and honest with you back. We laughed alot over that shit, and hugged. The look on your face when we talked about guns, or my relationships, was so endearing just a small shake of the head, or a shrug of the should like "well", but always keeping that smile on. I know my stories were funny but I think you understood that I am just trying to be happy & if it does not work then- ok movin on. Remember when Lee said to you- I promise you, that I will take good care of her? You responded to him saying- "well I don't care what you do, if she's not happy shell kick you to the curb anyway"!! I think that he was shocked but me & you just laughed and hugged and you said to me "Right", and I said yep- That's right and I already told him that. :)

The love I felt being around you was great & I always felt so good to just seeing you. Thank you for always asking about each of the kids, how they were doing, what they were up to- it meant alot to me and they loved you too.

Most of all- I will miss those wet, slobbery kisses that always greeted us when we saw you- we all have talked about those kisses, and laughed and I wish I could have 1 more of those kisses, I promise I would not wipe the slobber off this time...lol

You always understood me, and I understood you, and the things you struggled with.. which only a few of us did- no words needed to be said because your thoughts & emotions were read..

Do not worry about Nannie- Me, Wendy, Jessica, Brittany, Ryan, Precious, Reanna, & Josh are all making sure that she stays in her home, cared for, no matter what as a family- until you & Grandpa come & get her.

We all agreed we will all do whatever we need to as a family to be there for her until she reunites with the two of you, and she will be in the same house you all have been in waiting.

1 more thing- I felt you hugging me when I told Jessica on the phone that I can't feel you yet, and I am waiting for you to visit me- I started crying telling her, and right then from my head to my toe you had your arms around me and my whole body tingled- I said "well he is here now, I feel his arms holding me and my whole body is tingling" at that exact moment. Thank you for that time, your love, your acceptance, your laughs, your advice, you smart ass remarks, your direct & candid opinions or statements, for sharing with me and trusting me with the most precious guarded & hurt part of you- Your HEART.

The inside of who you were, the sweet, kind, funny, caring, man that you tucked away, thanks for keeping a space open for me. Come back and visit me as much as you can, sit and talk even for a split moment, Say Hi to Grandpa for me- Tell him I love him and I am glad the 2 of you are together again watching over us.

In Loving Memory:

*Your memory is here, but your spirit is gone,
The angels came & were singing you a beautiful song..
As The angels reached out, and took your hand,
your spirit rose up, your body no longer to stand.
The memories we shared, are embedded in my heart,
my love will not waiver, for we are not truly apart.
Until the time that we meet up again,
I love you & will miss you until my very end.
xoxox- Love Candy Powers (your favorite niece).*
